SHOULD RELIGION BE TAUGHT THROUGH THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS?

In the Province of Ontario the Statutes call for the opening and closing of the public schools with prayer and the daily reading of the Bible. To this the teachers generally add religious exercises, especially before the Christmas and Easter festivals. It is not unusual also for Jewish children to come home from the public schools singing, "Jesus Loves Me" and other such distinctly evangelical hymns.

Dissatisfied with these regulations, a deputation representing the various Protestant denominations (exclusive of the Baptists), waited upon Premier Ferguson urging that more religious instruction be introduced in the curriculum of our public schools. The Baptists, like the Jews, are staunch believers in the rigid and absolute separation of church and state, and for this reason have always objected to the introduction of religious teachings in the public schools.

The Protestants in contending for more religion in the schools argue that a godless generation is growing up, due to the absence of religion in the schools. The Sunday schools, they maintain, with their one or two hours a week, have neither the time, the facilities, nor the trained teaching staff required to impart religion to the child. They reason further that "the state is the citizen writ large," and that the majority of the citizens are Christians who desire their children to grow up as Christians; hence, it is legitimate for the public schools to impart the Christian religion to the rising generation. Their plan is to set aside a period each day for the teaching of religion by the public school teachers. For the protection of the Jewish and other non-Christian children, they provide the conscience clause which would give these children a right to leave the class during such instruction.

The demand of the Protestants is growing so insistent that the Government may soon be called upon to formulate a definite attitude. It is to be remembered that under the British North America Act, the Catholics remain unaffected by legislation respecting religion in the public schools.

The Jewish position on this issue presents an interesting paradox, because the Jews are, in the words of Mohammed, "the people of the Book" (Bible) and those who gave the Bible to the world. The Jews, too, are a people whose peculiar genius is that of religion. Jews have endured more for the sake of the Bible and religion in the schools, because in practice it means the teaching of Christianity. Long years of experience have has taught them that morality, as the outcome of religious instruction, is best produced through the regular discipline of the home and the synagogue or church. If the youth of the country appear to be growing up godless, and we do not lay claim to this sort of pessimism, the blame should be laid, not at the door of the public school, but must be borne by the home, synagogue and the the church. The problem cannot be solved by transferring the responsibility to the public schools, because the schools are already overburdened with too many subjects, which makes it impossible to teach any subject thoroughly. Secondly, the introduction of religion into the schools will be costly and the citizens will have to pay for a burden which has been and should continue to be borne by the home and organized religion, a responsibility which it would be criminal to relieve them of. Thirdly, it will split the community up into hostile, contending groups, and the public schools that now act as a unifying factor will become the object of dissension and dispute. Fourthly, to introduce religious differences between pupil and pupil will nulify the excellent effects of Canadianization, which our public schools now exert. The public schools are the great melting pot which melts. It smooths out differences and solidifies our citizenry by a common training. Those who are urging that the state is the citizen writ large have in mind a citizen who is a Protestant, forgetting that the population, especially of Ontario's cities, is no longer homogeneous in race or religion. Our cities are inhabited by citizens whose countries of origin are varied and whose religions are equally varied, yet these citizens find these differences no barrier to good citizenship. The citizen writ large, who is the state, is neither Protestant, Catholic nor Jew, Englishman, Frenchman, Italian nor Russian. He is just a Canadian, whose religion is his private concern, and whose country of origin a matter of past interest, but not of future interest.

It should be remembered by our Protestant friends who are doing all in their power to transform the public schools into Protestant schools, that the schools are the property of no one element in the community, even if they be in the majority. In matters of conscience the majority must respect the rights of the minority and not ride roughshod over it. A democratic country can only call itself democratic in proportion as the religious rights of the minority are safeguarded. This would not be the case if Christianity would become a subject of compulsory instruction in our schools. As for to suffer the indignity of being marked off as different by their fellow-pupils and teacher, which comes from the exercise of the right granted under the "conscience clause."

It is also worthy of note that though the terms "religious and moral instruction" are used synonymously, they are in practice not identical or even synonymous. Religious instruction in practice means creedal instruction, whereas moral instruction is training in ethical conduct. Even if most of the Protestant sects can unite on a common programme of Christian instruction, it would still be unacceptable to Baptists and other minority Christian groups, and of course it would be unsatisfactory to the Jews. Even in this event, each Protestant group would still retain the Sunday School to give distinctly denominational instruction which the the union cause would limit.

If Christians really are sincere in their desire for ethical and not creedal instruction in the public schools, then Jew and Christian can unite on a common cause of ethical studies. After all is said, the sine qua non — the heart of every civilized religion is morality. This idea was best expressed by the prophet, Micah when he said, "It hath been told thee, O man, what is good and what the Lord doth require of thee—only to do justly, to love mercy and to talk humbly with thy God." The Decalogue is universal to Christianity, Mohamedanism and Judaism.

A course of moral instruction such as we have reference to would be based on the acceptance of God as the Creator and Ruler of the world, and the Father of all mankind. The lessons of this course would contain the biographies of the outstanding moral leaders and prophets in the Old and New Testaments. It would not confine itself merely to the Bible, but would draw from general history, science and literature, the lives of all those who served humanity in the highest and noblest way, from antiquity to modern times.

Such moral instruction would certainly be religious in the truer and deeper use of that term without being creedal. It would imbue children with a knowledge of right and wrong, and instill in them a love for God. It would inculcate in them a passion for the truth. It would make them understand that religion is man thinking his highest, feeling his deepest and doing his best.

If this plan is not countenanced, then it is plain that the Protestants are not in earnest about ethical teaching, excepting as it is the outcome of creedal instruction. Under these circumstances, unity and harmony are not possible. If the state is to be asked to pay for the teachers to teach Christianity, then it is only fair that the state shall also allow for equal periods of the day to be set aside for

for Economical Transportation

A Factor in Modern Business and Social Activity

IF the automobile were suddenly withdrawn from our modern business and social life, do you realize how speedy and complete would be the disorganization?

Wider in its influence and effect than any other factor of present-day existence—the automobile has become of vital importance to commerce and society.

And Chevrolet can claim a prominent place in automobile progress, because it has brought quality and dependability within the realm of the low-priced car.

Chevrolet transportation is the most economical per mile. Chevrolet reliability is an established fact among motor-car users. Chevrolet exceeds expectations in the beauty of its appearance and the completeness of its appointments.

The Chevrolet Utility Coupe (with its handsome "body by Fisher") is the choice of the commercial user—the business or professional man, or salesman, whose business the automobile has assisted so materially. The Utility Coupe is a car of which anyone may well feel proud.

Investigate Chevrolet prices and performance. The G. M. A. C. plan of deferred payments makes it easy to finance the purchase.

From "Letters to a Great-Grandson" by Don Marquis in the New York Tribune:

Great fortunes have been made since the Prohibition Amendment became part of the Constitution, and are being made, by the sort of crook known as the Bootlegger. It will be interesting to follow the social fortunes of the Bootlegger. He is gathering wealth. It will not be many years before the source of his wealth will be forgotten or condoned by other wealthy persons. He or his children will acquire social standing, a solid position in the community—real power. Then he will be on the platform at public meetings, talking of the necessity for law enforcement. Why not? People whose money originated from smuggling slaves in from Africa, people whose fortunes came from the convict lease system, people who exploit the helplessness of humanity by sharing in the profits from child labour (which is one degrees worse than first degree murder) . . . . people who get rich because the mine guards they hire shoot down ignorant foreigners without a qualm, people who prey upon the huddled millions of the slums are always to be found, sooner or later, in their own persons, or the persons of their descendants, on platforms at public meetings, pleading passionately for the enforcement of the laws.

The immigrants don't need any more clothes probably, thank you. At least not the kind that comprised the greater part of free-will offerings in Toronto and elsewhere. Of course the things you and we gave were all right, in good condition, freshly cleaned and pressed, mended and with every button in place to complete the gracious gift of whole clothes to the needy poor. But oh, the kind of things those other people sent! You wouldn't believe it. Things donated on the principle that people with nothing ought to be pleased with anything.

If we were a cartoonist we should like a picture to go with this or to take its place. We'd have one immigrant in rags looking at the heap of almost unrecognizable apparel that some kind lady saved for him when she cleaned out the attic. Another would be dressed in an assortment representing the style procession from, say, the late nineties to the present date. One man would be clad for a vigorous day of push-carting in a high silk hat, riding breeches and a pair of snow shoes. The children would be in organdie bonnets and frocks that were once French and just the thing for chilly mornings. In the background would repose a mountain of stuff to be disposed of later where they buy what is known in polite business parlance as waste material.

The picture would be funny and people would laugh at it at first, but on second thought it might not be so funny. There might even be a grain of tragedy about it. Anyway, it would be true to life, and would reveal the contrast between up-stage and back-stage giving.

In up-stage giving you have speeches and spontaneity. Community watches community and groups vie with each other, sometimes not so reservedly, but always to the ultimate welfare of the beneficiary. There is usually fanfare connected with the public shouldering of communal burdens, a lot of announcing and sitting on the stage and all that. But back-stage giving goes on behind a kindly curtain where those who want to (and they are many) sit down and sort out years' accumulation of things to see what isn't wanted that the immigrants might be enchanted to accept.

This sounds harsh but it is true, or rather it sounds harsh because it is true. If you think we evolved it from our inner consciousness, ask people who have examined gift bundles and closed them back up again gingerly. If you think people do not give just for the sake of being known to give in the shelter of subsequent anonymity, ask people who have been in charge of contributed clothing. If all this weren't the case, such organizations as the Auxiliary of the Jewish Immigration Aid Society of Montreal would not have to ask publicly in the REVIEW that people give clothing wearable and useful so that donations don't need to be discarded as useless trash.

REPRESENTATIVE JEWS HONOUR RABBI HERBERT SAMUEL OF SHAAREY ZEDEK

Within the auditorium of Shaarey Zedek Tabernacle, and surrounded by a representative gathering of Jewish citizens and their ladies, a tribute was paid Sunday, March 23, to the pastor of the congregation, Rabbi Herbert Samuel. Rabbi Samuel is the chaplain of the Canadian Club, and a leader in some of the city's large benevolent endeavours.

After the signing of several hymns by a choir of young voices and devotional exercises conducted by the rabbi, there were a number of addresses by the leaders of the congregation, some of whom had been connected with the organization since the first meeting held in old Albert Hall over forty years ago. Max Steinkoff, the president, referred to the culture of Rabbi Samuel, and to the three periods of the congregation to its organization back in the eighties the union with the congregation which first occupied the site, and to the present the tenth anniversary of the pastorate of Mr. Samuel.

H. L. Weidman, past president, referred to the progress made in the past ten years, a decade of history not equalled in the past. His address was in Yiddish.

M. Halter, vice president, referred to the dignity and simplicity of the service conducted since Rabbi Samuel had charge. Weddings and funerals had taken on a new meaning; the young people had been advised and encouraged; more interest had been displayed by each individual in the welfare of the synagogue than ever before.

H. A. Isaacs, the first president of the amalgamated congregations, mentioned the series of sermons preached in the past ten years as suitable for all and for all times. The intercession and the thanksgiving services conducted in connection with the war, work in the Sunday School and with the Jewish students at the university, were all valuable to the congregation, while his public addresses had attracted the attention of the people at large and given Judaism in Winnipeg a high standard.

A. W. Myers, the treasurer, officiated at the revealing of the Ark of the covenant and the cantor sang

Rev. Mr. Samuel's Reply

Replying Rev. Mr. Samuel spoke of the uncertainty with which he had taken over the work. Coming from England, he entered into a task that was different. His system of service was on trial; not so much himself. Two congregations had just amalgamated, former rivalries had not died out and there was a lack of confidence as to the outcome. But after a severe trial he thought they could congratulate themselves that the cause had not suffered. Some would welcome more radical changes but in the interest of peace and progress it were better to have the spirit of tolerance and sympathy for the more old-fashioned of the brethren.

The synagogue is once again becoming the spiritual home of the Jew, stated the speaker due to the study of Jewish history and culture. It is the natural expression of nationalism. The Jew is once again learning to appreciate the sublime purity of his liturgy, the virility of his theology and the poetic beauty of his ceremonial. The English traditions in which your rabbi was trained proved suitable for a lofty standard of Judaism. The rabbi mentioned the Sunday School, the Friday night service, the coming confirmation. Over 150 children have graduated from the Sunday School, he stated.

Mr. Samuel paid a tribute to the officers, and urged the parents to remember the value of the Sunday School. this respect than any other congregation on the continent," he declared. He referred to the improvements at the cemetery and to other work carried on, proving that Shaarey Zedek is an institutional synagogue. He spoke of the deaths of three prominent workers—Arakie Cohen, Dave Ripstein and Fanny Frankfurter, whose lives had been devoted to the welfare of the community. The speaker closed with words of thankfulness for the health he had had, the aid received from the sisterhood, and for the valuable help given him by his wife in all his efforts.

After the singing of the National Anthem, adjournment was made to the basement, where Rabbi Samuel and Mrs. Samuel held an informal reception and the ladies served refreshments.

Miss Goldie Morganstern returned Thursday after spending a holiday with Miss Sara Lucille Segal, Glenella, Man.

Your Curtains

EVERY HOUSEWIFE who takes pride in the appearance of her window draperies, yet despairs at the difficulty of stretching them to proper size and shape after washing, will be interested in the service rendered by our curtain department. When they come in, the curtains are first carefully measured. Then they are washed with pure soap, being handled throughout this process with utmost gentleness. While still wet, the curtains are placed in pairs on a new and ingenious drying frame which stretches them perfectly even and flat at their exact original size. This frame holds all four sides whether they are straight or ornamental, so that the edges are perfectly parallel and even the corners absolutely square. SCIENCE DEMANDS UNIFORMITY

Careful research made in recent years in the study of dietetics has shown the great importance to the human system of purity and uniform quality in foods. It is a great blessing that to-day so many delicious foods as well as tea and coffee can be procured in tins and sealed metal packages. "SALADA" Tea was one of the first pure food products to become widely popular in Canada. The flavour-preserving aluminum package keeps the tea fresh and delicious. LONDON

I. GOLDSTICK ADDRESSES LONDON RALLY

When, under the auspices of the Men's Brotherhood Federation of London, a Canadian churchmen's movement for universal peace was launched at the Central Collegiate auditorium, I. Goldstick, of the Collegiate teaching staff, representing the Jewish people of London, Ont., moved that the educational system of the Dominion, as stated in the general resolution, be recast in the mold of peace and that history be taught in future in terms of human achievement rather than in relation to wars.

He explained that the Jewish people had from their earliest history been advocates of peace.

"My belief that the Messiah has not yet come," he declared, "is founded upon our hope that when He does come that advent will usher in a period of universal peace.

"In the late war there were Jews in all armies and on some battle fronts there happened that most tragic thing, which was Jew meeting Jew in mortal combat and one or both dying with the cry, 'Hear, O Israel, the Lord our God is one God.'

"Our people know the horrors of war. Not only from invading armies, but they have often had more reason to fear defeated armies of the land they lived in than the invader. In the Ukraine it has been authoritatively shown that 150,000 Jewish women and children were slain.

"Limitation of armaments is not enough; we must have limitation of racial hatreds. We must not consider human fraternity as an academic theory, but as something to practice. Take Henry Ford, for instance. We know of his peace ship in the war, but we also know of the hundreds of thousands of dollars he is spending to foster anti-Jewish propaganda.

"We must strike at the vitals of the monster of war, and the school is the effective agency. Through our schools we can begin deliberately and intentionally to teach the ideal of world peace. In Germany and Japan we have recent examples of nations that have made themselves over through their schools."

taught their respective religions in the school, and the Jewish and Baptist teachers who must be brought in for this special instruction should in all fairness be paid by the Government.

There is, however, another alternative, and that is not to teach religion in the public schools at all. In previous editorials on "Should the Bible Be Taught in the Public Schools" and "Moral and Religious Instruction," we showed how confusing and unsatisfactory the teaching of the Bible in the schools is. The best and most acceptable plan is for Christian and Jew to unite in urging the home, the church and the synagogue to renew its interest and accept its responsibility in the matter of the religious instruction of the young. We believe that this is most essential, and the need is most vital. The birthright of every child should be instruction in the faith of his fathers. Yet we insist that no agencies are more competent to do this than the parent in the home, and the church and synagogue in their respective schools. The Sunday School should be replaced by the week-day religious school which meets after public school hours and to which the children should be sent. The public schools can aid in and stimulate this great movement of restoring religious education to its rightful place by demonstrating that it values religious education. This it can do by giving extra credit to those pupils who can show that they have pursued a course of instruction in their religious schools, and have satisfactorily passed their examinations in these courses. Is there any reason why matriculation credit should be given for Latin and Greek and not for Hebrew? Or that Greek and Roman history should be recognized and not biblical, post biblical and church history, etc., etc? Hebrew is certainly as cultural as Greek or Latin, and biblical history and literature are on a par in cultural value with classical history and literature. In fact a classical and biblical training complement and supplement one another and no person can be said to be truly cultured who does not possess both biblical and classical learning. By giving credit for biblical and religious instruction the state can do much to encourage the religious schools, whilst at the same time steering clear of trouble.

In view of the many considerations that are at stake, it would be folly, we believe, for the Protestants to try and force the hands of the Government, on a question that is fraught with such dangerous consequences. We trust that peace, not strife, is their earnest desire.

REVIEW JUNIOR SECTION

Welcome to Our Cousin Family!

I am sure that you all join Cousin David and me in welcoming our two new cousins, Esther Hoffer, age 12, of Tribune, Sask., and H. Dime, age 11, 203 Bathurst Street, Toronto. Come along, new cousins! Let's have some more letters and contributions from you!

Cousin Judith.

All contributions for the Junior Section must be sent to CANADIAN JEWISH REVIEW, 319 Bay Street, Toronto, Ontario. Any girl or boy is welcome to join our section and to contribute poems, essays, stories, riddles, etc. Just fill out this little card and mail it at once.

REVIEW JUNIOR SECTION:

I would like to join the Cousin Family of the CANADIAN JEWISH REVIEW.

My name is. . . . . .

I live at. . . . . .

I am. . . . . years of age.

Dear girls and boys:

I suppose every single one of you has "collected" things at one time or other . . . either stamps, or souvenirs of all the parties you've been to, or your best school reports, or samples of your different frocks, or sichlike. I know I am a confirmed dyed-in-the-wool "collector, but the things I collect are not specimens of old china, nor rare books, nor even antique furniture. I like all those things, but I haven't space nor time to store 'em. Because, you see, I take all my things with me, partly because I want to, and partly because they just simply refuse to leave me. I wonder whether you can guess what the things are that I collect? Can you? No? Well, I'll tell you. I have a collection of bits of blue sky, sprays of delicate lace-like ferns, little chatterboxy streams, ever so tiny pictures of meadows of tall green grass, and here and there sketches of sorrowful cypresses, and all sorts of "feels" like the "feel" of the early dawn, just before a dive into salty waves of spray; or the "feel" of the wind, on a wild March day; the "lumpy-throat feel" that comes with a beautiful surprise; or the glorious "light as-air-balloony-feel" that comes for no reason whatever and wafts us along, our feet just pretending to touch the sidewalk as we walk, so that the dry-as-dust people won't know that we're soaring. And where do you think all these bits of lovely things are? Why, in my memory of course, so that I can look at them whenever and as often as I wish. And best of all, they're right there, so that it's just the easiest thing in the world to show them to folks! Like a camera-mind, y'know . . . Friinstance, there's a fleecy baby cloud that is coaxing the breeze to allow it to cling to the clearest, bluest sky just outside my window, and although the breeze is playfully pretending that a feathery baby cloud is too young to stay up so high, I just know that the cloud will have its own way . . . and I'm tucking the memory deep into my camera mind . . . for a rainy day! Suppose you try it some day?

And now for a new competition. Ye Maker of Limericks thought of this one, and I really think it will be one of the very best we've had. Here's the idea. Passover will be here, towards the middle of next month . . . and why can't we have a Passover Party, and invite as our guests our favourite characters in Jewish history, folk-lore and legends? So, cousins of mine, just you sit yourself down and plan your party. You may invite twelve guests, and they may be twelve of your Jewish story-friends . . . David or Samson; Esther or [illegible] you have say, and what games you will all play, and what sort of refreshments you will serve and everything else, why, write and tell us about it. Because we'll have a prize for the nicest party. So let your imagination run riot, and see what delightful hosts and hostesses you can be to the heroes and heroines of Jewish history. Remember, only twelve guests . . . and letters to arrive not later than April 18. Address them to Cousin Judith or Cousin David, 319 Bay Street, Toronto. Here's hopin'!

Cousin Judith.

THE STORY OF PURIM

By BEPEST

There was once a king whose name was Achashverosh. He ruled over his kingdom of which Shushan was the capital.

On the third year of his reign he invited all the princes, princesses, and people of the country, who were near him, to a feast which lasted seven days.

Vashti the queen made a feast for the women. On the seventh day when the king was drunk from the wine he had drank the other six days he called for Vashti, the queen. But the queen refused to come, which made the king very angry. One of the wise men said, "If Vashti, the queen, refuses to obey the king, then the princesses and wives of the husbands will not obey their husbands. Therefore send an order out that will say: "Vashti comes no more to Achashverosh and the king will give her royal dignity to someone who is better than she."

The speech was pleasing to the eyes of the king and he sent forth the order.

After these events, when the king's fury was quieted down, he remembered Vashti and what she had done. He then said to his servants, "Let the prettiest maidens of the country be sent to the king, and the one that is most pleasing in the eyes of the king, she shall be queen."

There was a Jewish maiden whose name was Esther, her father and mother were dead and she lived with her uncle, Mordecai. She was very handsome and was sent before the king. She was the most pleasing in the eyes of the king, and she was chosen queen.

The king made a great feast, the feast of Esther. But Esther had not told of her decent or religion, therefore it was unknown to the king.

One day as Mordecai was sitting at the king's gate he heard two plotters, plotting to kill the king. He told what he had heard to Esther, who repeated it to the king, mentioning Mordecai.

The thing was inquired into and found to be true. The plotters being hanged and Mordecai's name and the deed he had done was written in the book of chronicles.

There was a certain man named Haman whom the king made his heir. The people who sat at the king's gate all bowed down to Haman as he passed, all but Mordecai.

Haman spoke of this to the king and said, "There is one man who sits at the king's gate, a Jew, who refuses to bow down to me. The Jews do not have the same rules of the king. If it pleases the king let an order be sent out that all the Jews are to be hung on the gallows on the thirteenth day of Adar." And the order was sent out.

When Mordecai heard of this order he rent his clothes and put on sackcloth with ashes and went out into the city and cried with a loud and bitter cry, and wherever there was a Jew he cried the same loud and bitter cry.

When Esther heard of this she sent forth a messenger to Mordecai and to ask him if it was true.

Mordecai told the messenger what was going to happen to all the Jews, the messenger told Esther what Mordecai had said.

Esther sent back this answer, "Get together all the Jews and fast for me for three days, and my maidens and I the king, which is against the law, to save my people; and if I then perish, I perish."

Mordecai did as Esther had told him.

Esther went to the king, who was sitting on his throne. He saw Esther and held out sceptre, Esther drew near and touched the top of sceptre. Then said the king, "What is thy request queen Esther, if it be equal to half of my kingdom it shall be given thee."

"Let the king and Haman come this day to a banquet I have prepared for them," said Esther. The king and Haman did as Esther had wanted.

Then said the king again, "What is thy request, even if it be equal to half of my kingdom it shall be given to thee."

"If I have found grace in thine eyes, and if it please the king to come once again with Haman to the banquet which I will prepare for them to-morrow, I will do as the king wishes to-morrow."

Haman went home and told his wife and children that Esther the queen did not invite anyone to come with the king to the banquet that she had prepared but himself.

"But all this does not profit me any when I see Mordecai sitting at the king's gate."

"Let them make gallows of fifty cubits high and in the morning speak to the king that they may hang Mordecai on them, and then go to the banquet with the king joyfully," said his wife Zeresh.

During the night the king did not sleep. He called for the book of the memorable events of the chronicles.

It was written in the book that Mordecai had told of the two plotters who had sought to kill the king.

"What honour has been shown to this man," asked the king.

The servants replied, "No honour has been shown to this man."

"Haman has come into the outer court to say unto the king to hang Mordecai the Jew on the gallows on which he has prepared for him."

"Haman is standing in the court room," said the servant.

"Let him come in."

Haman came in and the king said to him. "What shall be done to the man whom the king desires to honour."

Haman answered, thinking to himself, "I am the only man whom the king would desire to honour." He said aloud; "For the man whom the king desires to honour, let him be dressed in the king's robes, sit on the king's horse, and let one of the king's servants go with him into the city and cry, 'This is the man whom the king desires to honour.'"

"Make haste," said the king, "take the king's robes, the king's horse, and do just what thou hath spoken, to Mordecai the Jew."

Haman took the king's robes and horse, and went to Mordecai, who was sitting at the king's gate, dressed him in the king's robes put him on the king's horse, and rode him through the streets crying, "This is the man whom the king desires to honour."

The next night Haman and the king went to Esther's banquet.

The king again said, "What is thy request, queen Esther, even if it be half of my kingdom it shall be given to thee."

"If I have found grace in thine eyes, and if thou will grant it here is my request."

"I will grant it if it be half of my kingdom."

"O king, save me and my people, for we are to be slain on the thirteenth day of Adar."

"Who is he," asked the king, "where is he who dares to do such a thing?"

"A very bad and wicked man," replied Esther. "This wicked man is Haman."

At this Haman became quite terrified, while the king went away leaving Haman to beg mercy of the queen.

One of the chambermaids said, "There are in the yard the gallows which Haman has prepared for Mordecai."

"Hang him on them," answered the king.

So Haman was hung on the gallows

The king gave Esther the house of Haman, Esther made Mordecai ruler over the house.

The king also gave him his signet ring and made him next to the king.

But all the Jews to this day assemble together on the thirteenth day of Adar and on the fourteenth of the same month rest. On the fifteenth day of Adar we celebrate it, and send things to each other.

MAIL BAG

Dear Harry:

Thanks very much for the story which you enclosed. I read it and found it interesting. The reason why I am not printing it is this: there is really so little space for all our Cousins that we have made it a rule to publish only original stories. If you send us a story written by you, we'll print it sure as anything! So, set your cap-of-ideas aright and get yourself a brand new pen, and see what happens. Write again and tell us more about yourself.

Cousin David.

Dear Cousin Judith:

I am sending in a poem on Winter, and am I in time for the contest? Did you receive my other poem?

WINTER

Now upon the window pane
The frost begins to fling
Ferns and flowers and sprouting grains
In mimicry of spring.

Icicles are gathering and snowflakes fill the air,
For winter has arrived and there's cold to spare.

Bare boughs are hung about
With drapery of snow;
Little nests, whence birds flew out,
Their hiding places show.

But in spite of storm and drift
And frosty nights remember,
The merry, merry sleigh bells
Are heard but once a year.

I remain,
Yours truly,
Esther Raport.

Dear Esther:

I am sorry to say that your poem is too late for our contest. The first few lines especially are really very beautiful. Won't you send me some more verses that you have made up? Perhaps you can write a Purim poem for us- suppose you try. In any case, come again soon.

Cousin Judith.

149 Seaton Street,
Toronto, Ontario,
March 5, 1924.

Dear Cousin Judith:

I have not written for a long time, but I know you will forgive me.

What dreary weather we are having nowadays! But it can't be helped, seeing it is March.

My penname is "Bepest." It's a funny one, isn't it?

I've a suggestion to make. How would a Book Nook do? All the cousins could send in the names of the books they've read.

Well, I guess I will have to close now, wishing the club every success.

Bepest.

P.S.—I am entering the contest.

Dear Bepest:

I've thought and thought and then I've thought some more, but really, Bepest, I just cannot think of what your name means. Did you make it up yourself? Tell me a little more about it, and perhaps I can guess the rest. I think it would be great to have a Book Nook, and sure enough we'll start off with your list. The other cousins must keep it going. Your essay is being kept for the Purim number.

Cousin Judith.

BOOK-LOVERS' NOOK

I'm sending in a list of books that I have read:

Nicholas Nickleby.
Cornet of Horse.
All the Twin books.
Australian and Jewish Cousins.

POETS' CORNER

FAIRY FLIGHT

O fairies, bring me fairy shoes,
Or whisper the name of the street,
The name of the house or the number
—do.
The name of the cobbler who sews for you
Those slippers so soft and fleet.

O fairies, bring me silvery wings,
Or point me your peddler's track;
Then over the hills and into the hollow,
By river and meadow and stream I'll follow
To search in his fairy pack.

VOICES OF THE AIR

But then there comes that moment rare
When, for no cause that I can find,
The little voices of the air
Sound above all the sea and wind.

The sea and wind do then obey
And sighing, sighing double notes
Of double basses, content to play
A droning chord for the little throats.

The little throats that sing and rise
Up into the light with lovely ease
And a kind of magical, sweet surprise
To hear and know themselves for these.

For these little voices: the bee, the fly,
The leaf that taps, the pod that breaks,
The breeze on the grass-tops bending by,
The shrill quick sound that the insect makes.

— From "Poems," by Catharine Mansfield.

AN ANGEL AMONG ANGELS

By Alter Abelson

Like a queen who lays away a garment old,
Upon a shelf, or in a wardrobe cold,
Only to don her state, her raiment new,
And fairer than the first, with which to view
The king when towards the palace gate
she fares,
So mother's soul, when freed from mortal
cares,
Her worn but queenly robes of flesh laid by
Upon a shelf of dust, the grave, to try
Her heavenlier raiment made of whiter beams,
With which to meet the Lord of all life's dreams,
Like an angel she came amid God's angel band;
She came to heaven as to her native land.
